The State Department distributes a four-part film series, "The History of U.S. Foreign Relations," and "From Where I Sit," an examination of how public opinion affects foreign policy decisions.

The History of U.S. Foreign Relations: Using actual locations, paintings, political cartoons, and documentary footage, this series of four 30-minute color films recreates the history of U.S. foreign relations from the American Revolution to mid-1975. "An Age of Revolutions" documents American diplomacy from the American Revolution through the Monroe Doctrine. "Youth to Maturity" traces the expansion of American interests and the evolution of the United States into a major world power prior to the events of World War I. "The Reluctant World Power" illustrates the increasing involvement of the United States in world affairs engendered by the events of the period between the wars. "The Road to Interdependence" outlines the development of U.S. foreign policy from the end of World War II through the onset of the 1970s.

From Where I Sit. This 30-minute film explores the many conflicting interests and opinions which converge on foreign policy issues and shape our national goals. Using the issues of trade, energy, and arms control, the film provides a basis for discussion of the kinds of decisions and choices confronting policymakers.

Videotapes

The Department also has available the following videotapes:

A Discussion on U.S.-Soviet Relations (22 minutes): This new release considers bilateral relations and the prospects for an arms control agreement. Ambassador Paul Nitze, Special Adviser to the President and the Secretary of State on Arms Control Matters, and Mark Palmer, Deputy Assistant Secretary for European and Canadian Affairs and an expert on Soviet affairs, are interviewed by broadcast journalist Nelson Benton. Among the topics covered are: long-range U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union, the human rights question, the role of summitry, U.S. arms control policy, the Strategic Defense Initiative, Soviet negotiating techniques, and the prospects for improved U.S.-Soviet relations.

The Strategic Defense Initiative (25 minutes): Senior Administration officials explain the rationale for the Strategic Defense Initiative research program, including the basic technologies being investigated, how such a defensive system might protect us from a nuclear attack, and the relative deterrent value of offensive and defensive systems. Also included are discussions of Soviet space defense research, compliance with the ABM Treaty, the reaction of our NATO allies, and the Soviet attitude toward SDI at the Geneva arms control negotiations. This videotape may be supplemented with the Department publication, The Strategic Defense Initiative, June 1985.

The Work of Peace

The Smithsonian Institution has available a 28-minute film, "The Work of Peace," which tells the little-known story of the peace talks culminating in the Treaty of Paris of 1783, which ended the Revolutionary War and established American independence. Produced on location in England and France, the documentary shows how American diplomats Benjamin Franklin, John Jay, and John Adams won a remarkable triumph in their peace negotiations with the formidable rulers of France, Great Britain, and Spain. Dramatic recreations bring crucial moments in the talks to life, with dialogue taken from the original writings of the diplomats. Through the film, viewers trace the making of the treaty, which has been called "the most favorable in the history of American diplomacy." A comprehensive study guide is available, which contains historical background on the treaty, strategies for teaching the topic of diplomacy, and suggestions for classroom activities. Accompanying resource materials include portraits, a map, a Treaty of Paris poster, and a transcript of the treaty itself.
